Question 1: What is the principle of "separation of powers" as it applies to the Missouri government?

Answer: The Missouri Constitution, like the US Constitution, sets up a system of checks and balances amongst three distinct branches of government: the legislative (General Assembly), the administrative (Governor and other elected officials), and the court (courts). Each branch has specific powers and responsibilities, preventing any one branch from becoming too dominant. This prevents tyranny and ensures a balanced distribution of authority. Examples include the legislature's power to create laws, the executive's power to veto legislation, and the judiciary's power of judicial review.

Question 2: Briefly describe the structure of the Missouri General Assembly.

Answer: The Missouri General Assembly is a bicameral legislature, meaning it consists of two chambers: the Senate Chamber and the House of Representatives. The Senate has thirty-four members, each representing a district, while the House of Representatives has 163 members, also representing districts. The size difference reflects the principle of equal representation, with larger populations having more representatives in the House.

Question 3: What is the role of the Missouri Governor?

Answer: The Missouri Governor is the head of the executive branch. Their key responsibilities include carrying out laws passed by the General Assembly, appointing various officials, preparing the state budget, and commanding the state's National Guard. The Governor also holds the power of veto over legislation.

Question 4: Explain the concept of "initiative and referendum" in the context of Missouri's Constitution.

Answer: Initiative and referendum are methods that allow citizens to directly participate in the lawmaking process.
