The Driving Forces Behind Colonization: Mercantilism and Beyond

The colonization of North America was not a haphazard event; it was driven by a complex interplay of economic, political, and religious factors. A key driver was mercantilism, an economic system where a nation's wealth was measured by its gold and silver reserves. England sought to enrich itself through its colonies, viewing them as sources of raw materials (like timber, tobacco, and cotton) and markets for manufactured goods. Beyond mercantilism, religious persecution played a significant role. Many colonists, like the Pilgrims and Puritans, sought refuge from religious intolerance in England. Understanding these motivations is essential to interpreting the events and choices detailed in your "elosuk" Unit 2.

Proprietary colonies, such as Maryland and Pennsylvania, were granted to individuals or groups by the English crown, who then held considerable power over their governance. Charter colonies, like Connecticut and Rhode Island, operated under charters granted by the crown, but enjoyed greater self-governance. Royal colonies, such as Virginia and New York, were directly controlled by the English monarchy, with governors appointed by the crown. These variations in governance significantly impacted the political and social development of each colony.

Challenges and Triumphs: Shaping the Colonial Experience
