FAQ

Q1: What is the difference between a general partnership and a limited partnership for tax purposes?

A1: While both are treated as pass-through entities for tax purposes, meaning income and losses are passed through to the partners' individual returns, the key difference lies in the liability of the partners. General partners have unlimited personal liability for partnership debts, while limited partners' liability is limited to their capital contribution. This distinction doesn't directly impact the calculation of taxes but significantly impacts personal risk exposure.

Q2: How are guaranteed payments treated for tax purposes?

A2: Guaranteed payments to partners, like salaries, are deductible by the partnership and are treated as ordinary income for the partner receiving them. This differs from the distributive share of partnership income, which is typically subject to self-employment tax only for general partners.

Q3: What happens if a partnership incurs a loss exceeding the partners' basis?

A3: Losses exceeding a partner's basis are generally not deductible in the current year but can be carried forward to future years and deducted against future income. This highlights the importance of accurately tracking basis.

Q4: How do non-liquidating distributions impact a partner's basis?

A4: Non-liquidating distributions reduce a partner's basis. The distribution is tax-free to the extent of the partner's basis; any excess is taxed as a capital gain.

Q5: What is the significance of the partnership agreement in determining tax liability?

A5: The partnership agreement is crucial. It determines how income, losses, deductions, and credits are allocated among the partners. While the IRS allows for adjustments if the agreement is deemed unreasonable, it's paramount to have a well-drafted agreement aligning with tax regulations.

Q6: Are there any resources beyond the 9th edition to help further understand partnership taxation?
